Sam Fulton Retires At 70; Traveled Over One Million Miles

A veteran Rock Island employee known to practically most of the residents along the line from Joliet to Chicago retired from active duty last Saturday.

He is Sam Fulton who for 41 years has travelled on the Rock Island "milk train" as express messenger for the American Express Company and the Rock Island railroad between Joliet and Chicago.

Mr. Fulton during his many years of service has travelled over 1,400,000 miles. He has handled millions of gallons of milk and made hundreds of friends with farmers along the route. One of the friendships so formed proved so strong that several years ago a farmer willed him $500 in appreciation of the faithful services he had received in the handling of his milk.

During the past 41 years Mr. Fulton has worked on the same train. He made his last run last Saturday afternoon and when the train pulled in the Union Station in Joliet he was met by Associate messengers who congratulated him upon his retirement from service and presented him with a remembrance of his long service with the company. Monday Mr. Fulton had his first holiday since his retirement and to celebrate the occasion Mr. Fulton took the Rock Island to Chicago. This time it was not as part of his regular work, but only as a pleasure jaunt.

Mr. Fulton attained the age of 70 years and is still hale and hearty. He resides at 621 Norton ave., Joliet.

Mokena Needs Zoning Ordinance

The matter of a zoning and building ordinance for Mokena is very badly needed if village property values are to be kept up and living conditions improved. It is imperative that the village board establish restrictions as to the type and cost of building that may be erected in the village in the future. By doing so undesirable, trashy buildings will be eliminated. It is also important that such ordinance separate residential and business buildings in the future so no objectionable business enterprise can be located in the residential area.

Amish At Orland For Brief While

Residents of this week residents Orland Park were amused to see a group of bewhiskered men of small stature arrive in their community. These men were members of the Amish sect. They had a car load of horses and stock shipped over the Wabash from Connel Springs, Kansas to Orland Park. The stock was reloaded on trucks and hauled to the Amish settlement at Burr Oak, Michigan, 120 miles from Orland Park.

The reason the shipment was made to Orland is due to the cheap freight rates. It was found that by having the stock shipped to Orland and then hauled by truck to Michigan it was cheaper than to have the car routed to Burr Oak, Michigan.

Wienie Roast At Tinley Creek

Spring is the time for all kinds of outdoor activities, especially wienie roasts. Tinley Creek Forest preserve is a good place for wienie roasts in good weather or bad. So bring a wienie and a roll and your best girl and come to the TINLEY PARK COMMUNITY ROAST, Wednesday, May 10th around 8:00 p. m. at the Tinley Creek. If you have a car prepare to pick up hitch hikers. DON'T MISS THE FUN!

New Lenox Town- send Club to Meet

The New Lenox Townsend Club will meet Tuesday evening May 9 at 8 o'clock in Emiley's hall. The public is invited. About twenty members have been enrolled and as soon as thirty members have signed up, the group will apply for a charter.

Frankfort Merchant Married In Chicago

Mr. Henry Mark of the firm of Mager and Mark, Grocers of Frankfort, was married in Chicago Wednesday.

TINLEY MAN DIES IN LASALLE ST., STATION

Max Link, aged 53 years, who has been a resident of Tinley Park for the past 7 years, died of a sudden heart attack Sunday afternoon at 4 o'clock while waiting for a train in the LaSalle Street Station in Chicago.

Mr. Link did not have any cards or papers on his person and the only means of identification was a monthly Rock Island commuters ticket. Mr. Link was a tailor by trade and was employed by a Chicago tailoring establishment.

He is survived by his widow and two daughters. Funeral services were held Thursday in Chicago with burial in Beverly Hills.

Frankfort Board Makes Plea For Sane Driving

Mayor Geo. Sangmeister and the village board of Frankfort are endeavoring to curb the fast and reckless driving of automobiles thru the streets of Frankfort and are making the following appeal to the public:

"Did you ever stop to think of some small boy playing near the streets who might dart out in front of your car? He has been warned not to do so but little boys heed no warnings. Some adults do not either. Especially for example, the one limiting the speed of automobiles.

"Now stop a minute and think. If you should kill a child how would you feel facing his parents? What excuse could you make to them for having robbed them of their dearest possession? More important, what excuse could you offer Him whose Kingdom is made up of little children?"

"All the automobiles on earth are not worth the life of one little boy or girl, so we can not spare a single boy or girl as victims of street accidents."

So the village board of Frankfort is asking the co-operation of the local citizens as well as the visitors. The board members declare if they cannot receive this cooperation, that any member of the village board will be compelled to enforce the law.

Hitch-Hike To New York Fair

The Editor is in receipt of a postal card from Mokena's globe trotters Col. and Mrs. Don C. Hall who are making a hitch-hiking trip to New York to attend the World's Fair. Col. Hall states that he will have a very interesting message upon completing his trip to the Fair.

Roy Newton, Jr., And Edith Hurley Married In B. I.

Miss Edith Hurley of Mokena and Roy Newton Jr., of Orland township, were united in marriage in the First Methodist Church parsonage in Blue Island, last Saturday afternoon at four o'clock. The Rev. Frank Palm officiated.

The attendants were Miss June Pfaff of Frankfort and Eugene McGovney of Mokena.

Following the wedding the bridal party went to Joliet where they had their wedding dinner.

Mokena Board Plans Street Improvements

The Mokena village board at their regular meeting Tuesday night launched a street improvement program. Stone is to be procured this week and work on repairing the streets will be under way. Harold Spiess has been operating a town grader on some of the side streets the forepart of the week. The village has $1200 due in gas tax money and the state highway department is being contacted to learn whether or not any of this money will be available for oiling some of the side streets.

Neithammer Avenue is to be ripped up and resurfaced with crushed stone.

The village clerk Everett Cooper reported that collections on vehicle licenses have been the best this year of any previous years, only a very few delinquent being listed.

Village engineer McCoy of Chicago Heights is being contacted this week to find out whether the WPA water main project for Mokena is still alive and if so efforts will be made to get the project under way.

Geo. Rinke appeared before the board and offered to donate a strip of 3 feet from his property on Neithammer Avenue for sidewalk purposes providing the village will stone the street in front of his place. Similar offer was made by Chas. Burkhardt. Mayor Harry Mall and Mr. Rinke were to see Wm. Junker of Orland Park who owns a lot adjoining the properties mentioned, to find out whether he will donate a similar strip of land for sidewalk purposes.

The board voted to fix the salaries for village offices on the same basis as last year.

Miss Elmira McGovney was appointed to serve as village treasurer to fill the unexpired term of her brother Erwin McGovney who recently passed away. The Treasurer's term expires June 30.

The board also passed the following resolution of condolence on the death of Erwin W. McGovney, treasurer of the village of Mokena:

Whereas, Erwin W. McGovney, Treasurer of the Village of Mokena, departed this life on the 5th day of April, A. D. 1939, and

Whereas, In the death of Erwin W. McGovney this village has lost a useful and highly esteemed official who, as Village Treasurer, discharged every official duty ably, fearlessly and honestly; therefore, be it

Resolved, That we, the Board of Trustees of the Village of Mokena, in regular meeting assembled, deplore the death of Erwin W. McGovney, and we do hereby extend to his family, to those who were nearest and dearest to him, our deepest and our tenderest sympathy, and assure them that in his death this village has lost a staunch friend and an able and honest official; and be it further

Resolved, That this resolution be spread upon the records of this village, and that a copy thereof be presented to the family of the decedent.

At the close of the meeting the re-elected members were sworn in by the village clerk Everett Cooper, J. G. Oswald, Wm. Semmler, Lloyd Warning.

The new board voted to reappoint Herman Schweser as fire Marshall. The board of Health headed by Dr. E. G. McMahon was reappointed.

The various committees of the village board were left the same as they were.

The matter of purchasing a flag and flag pole for the village was discussed but no action was taken.

Arabian Nights Big Success

The three-act musical comedy presented by the Palos Juniors of Palos Park, on April 27 and 28 was a big success financially and artistically. The comedy, under the personal direction of Chic Perkins-King, played to two packed houses and the Palos Juniors were rewarded at the box office with receipts totaling $300.75.

Everone agreed that this production was the most successful event ever staged in Palos Park.

The entire cast will present the same show at an early date at the Midlothian school.

Chic Perkins-King is forming a stock company in Palos Park which will tour all the towns within a radius of 25 miles. Members for this organization will be carefully selected as to their ability and interest shown in this type of work.

Anyone interested in becoming a member of this fast growing organization may obtain information by writing a letter to Chic Perkins-King, stating their qualifications.

MARTHA FOLKERS OF FRANKFORT PASSES AWAY

Mrs. Martha Folkers, nee Bettenhausen, aged 69, died in her home in Frankfort Wednesday May 3rd, following a long illness.

Born in Green Garden township, the deceased has lived in Frankfort since girlhood. She was the wife of Frank Folkers, a member of the firm of Folkers Bros., Meat Market.

Surviving beside her husband are: a son Attorney Herbert Folkers and a daughter, Mrs. Florence Johnson, both of Joliet; five grand children: two sisters, Mrs. Mary Diest and Mrs. Emma Kohlhausen of Frankfort also.

Funeral services will be held Friday afternoon at 1:30 o'clock from the home to the Methodist church at two o'clock with the pastor, the Rev. C. F. Schellhase officiating.

Burial will take place in Pleasant Hill cemetery.

Change Needed In Will Co., Circuit Court Say Voters

Altho there is not a great deal of interest being manifested in the coming Will County Judicial election, there is a feeling current among the rural voters that the Circuit Court of Will County is due for a change. The voters still remember how near Judge Edwin L. Wilson, Democratic incumbent came near being impeached as a result of his attitude on the slot machine question in Will County.

Some voters are trying to give the judge credit for his action in the Jones case while on the other hand, other voters feel that this was just a political move to help make the public forget the past.

With so many candidates in the field for Circuit Court Judge and with so many different views being aired, it is confusing to the voters.

This part of Will County, being rock-ribbed Republican, the choice will most naturally be Republican.

Mokena Junior Red Cross In Peace Program

The Mokena Junior Red Cross group will give a World Peace Day program at the school assembly on Friday afternoon May 5th, today.

The meeting will be called to order by the president, Melvin Krapp.

The Juniors will repeat their Pledge lead by their vice president, George Rinke Jr. All will sing one verse of the National Anthem.

Virginia Nebeker will read a short report on the purpose of the meeting, namely: "World Peace Day." Some of the members will read papers on Significant Peace Movements of the world, namely: "Clara Barton", "Christ of the Andes" and "The International Peace Garden" which is situated between the United States and Canada.

All the mothers are invited to attend this assembly as it is the first time our Junior Red Cross group have conducted a meeting in public.

Frankfort Board Observes Crime Prevention Week

In compliance with a letter from County Judge Glenn Cowing, the Village Board of Frankfort, at their meeting last Monday night, appointed village president, George Sangmeister to act as chairman for observance of Crime Prevention Week in the Frankfort territory during the week of May 7th.

Mayor Sangmeister has asked the clergymen of Frankfort to prepare a special sermon on the subject of Crime Prevention.

The Board was advised by Judge Cowing that he has been appointed by the Governor as chairman of activities in Will county and states that crime, and especially juvenile crime has become such a tremendous problem that he is in hopes that every effort will be made to bring this problem to the attention of the people of the communities of the county.

The Frankfort village board also passed resolutions for the observance of Crime Prevention Week and the Proclamation issued by Acting Gov. John Stelle, was read and discussed. The proclamation is as follows:

Mokena Band 3rd Annual Concert May 5th

The third annual concert of the Mokena School band will be given in the school gym at 8 o'clock. A door prize, a Cory glass coffee maker will be given away and the quilt, lamp and hostess tray will be awarded tonight.

The band members will wear their splendid new maroon and gold uniforms for the first time and the Director, Howard Strom, has arranged a program that everyone will enjoy.

Your support and attendance at this concert will be greatly appreciated, not only because a band of this type deserves the backing of the community, but also because a substantial sum is needed to pay toward the new uniforms.

Don't miss our big event of the year.

Mokena Y. O. To Give Award

The Mokena Youth Organization is sponsoring a gift reward, to be held at the Mokena depot at eight o'clock May 31st. The money derived from same will be used to purchase sweat-shirts and equipment for its baseball and kittenball teams.

The winner will have a choice of three articles: a large oscillating electric deck fan; an automatic control electric iron or five dollars in cash. The electric fan and iron are Knapp-Monarch products, nationally advertised and guaranteed. Tickets are for sale by all MYO members.

Tinley Woman's Club Affair

April 26th officially closed the Tinley Park Woman's Club for the year, ending the 1938-1939 year with the annual election.

Mrs. Wm. Bethke delighted the morning meeting with a dramatic presentation of how to train for a more fluent and satisfactory speech and Mrs. Bethke also read one story and several poems.

The group took their sandwiches to Mrs. Chas. Nielsen's home for coffee.

Mrs. Frank Baldwin was elected first vice president and Mrs. E. Brown Campbell, corresponding secretary.

The committee chairmen gave interesting reports of their work thru the year and Mrs. August Mesenbrink, our dean, was named head of the management of the annual Spring Luncheon. June first was date set.

Mrs. M. J. Rensink's Music Group sang and it was well received by the audience.

The trip to Oak Forest, postponed because of the illness of Chairman Mrs. J. C. Funk, is planned for May 17th. Put the date in a red circle on your calendar and go if you can, but meat sandwiches, individually wrapped, may be handed in at the store if one cannot make the trip. Six or more sandwiches each, Meet at Funk's Store at 1:30 p. m.

Irene unlocked the turtle-back and Breck looked in. Folding chairs, folding tables, folding beds lay there. He drew them out, uncovering boxes of fresh fruit, a tin of wafers, three bon voyage baskets of candy.

"Irene," he asked, "are you sure you have plenty of real food?"

"Oh yes! Heaps!"

"How much flour, rice and bacon?"

"No flour. I brought crackers. You know, Gordon, I never eat rice. And bacon . . . just a minute. I had Toby buy everything." She turned to the chauffeur. "Toby, how much bacon?"

"Six half pound packages, I think."

Breck grinned. "No flour, no rice, three pounds of bacon." He waved toward the house. "You rest in there—all of you. I'll do the packing."

"And I'll watch!" Irene asserted with suspicion. "I know what you're going to do. I've got the cutest little mattress with springs that squish down. I must take it. And I suppose you would throw out an evening dress."

"You didn't bring one!"

"Of course. Won't we dance?"

"Yes," Breck promised, thinking of Temple's rodeo, "we'll dance. But the only evening gown you'll need is the one you sleep in!"

When the others had gone into the house, he and Divine sorted what little of the equipment there was that could be used.

"I've seen some right pretty camp junk," the packer observed, standing among the sets of furniture painted red and blue, with striped covers to match, "but this is plumb grand!"

They selected about one-fourth the car's contents and made up kyacks for three mules. Immediately Breck lashed on the bedding and drew cinches tight, and so had it all covered before the family returned. When they did come from the house he hustled them into their saddles.

He put the Senator in the lead and gave him a mule to tow. Then Mrs. Sutherland with her maid next; a middle-aged woman whose tight lips showed disapproval of the whole affair. Toby followed, surprising Breck with a good knowledge of horses. Irene chose her own place next himself at the rear.

The start was made noisily, with Dick Divine grinning from his door. Breck turned and waved, at the same time seeing they were not to be alone on the upward trail. It was plain that Art had waited deliberately. Now he was getting his salt train into line.

CHAPTER XVIII

Much could be read in this act, out if Art had a definite purpose he was in no hurry to show it. For two hours Breck pushed his tourist string up the wall, ascending in short, hair-pin turns directly over the pack camp. It was hot when they started. Soon the Senator took off his white coat and tried to sit on it. A moment later he removed his tie and hung it on the saddle horn. He seemed inclined to dispose of his shirt also when Mrs. Sutherland spoke to him.

At the end of two hours they came onto a shelf where the first long-needle pine offered shade and a spring trickled from the rock. Breck called a halt, telling everyone to get off and stretch their legs.

It was while they rested on the shelf that Art Tillson came swinging up the trail, driving eight mules and leading two. He made a strong, rugged picture. His mules, stalwart, lean-legged fellows, bore the weight of salt bags with no effort and marched past in close formation, furry ears flopping with each step. Art himself rode with all the unconscious grace of a born horseman, with broad-shouldered body rolling to the animal's gait, his gloved right hand, holding the lead rope, braced against his thigh.

From the moment he cleared the bend of the trail his eyes were upon Irene. He held them there until he was almost abreast, then looked away for a time but turned in his saddle before passing out of sight further on.

"Well!" Irene gasped. "Who is that handsome beast?"

Breck scowled. "He's a cowboy with a herd of cattle here in the mountains."

"Did he never see a woman before? Those eyes! Was he looking at me or through me?"

"It's hard to tell," Breck answered vaguely, preparing to move on. "That boy is a character up here. You won't see him again."

"Won't I, though! My dear, when a man looks like that, must I be blind?"

Breck paused in gathering up his reins. "Yes, Irene, you must."

"What? Why Gordon! Is this an official order—I mustn't want to see him again?"

"Don't use any of your tricks on him, that's all. I can't explain now."

"But, my dear," Irene smiled, "he's such a fine animal!"

Breck laughed but put sincerity into his warning. "You mind the ranger!"

After starting the party upward again, he rode in silence, deep within his thoughts. At this moment he would rather have been bringing a load of dynamite into the mountains than Irene. She was ruthless. He knew it was not beyond her to take a curious interest in Art, play him until that was satisfied, then cut him.

Once more that afternoon she turned their talk to him, asking, "What will you bet that I don't see my cowboy friend before night?"

"You won't," Breck asserted. "He'll be halfway over the roof by the time we reach the summit."

But woman's instinct was better than man's reasoning. When they came into Summit Meadow at dusk, a campfire was burning at the further end. Tillson's mules grazed nearby, and the cowboy sat cooking his supper over the flames.

Immediately Breck turned off toward a stream of water that just the stirrup that needed no adjusting, then regained his saddle.

"Thank you so much," Irene caressed him. "It does feel better."

She drew her horse's head around. "Mister Temple was very kind, offering us lunch, but mother looks so tired. Really, if she ever gets off her beast she'll never get back on. And when we reach your station I don't believe I will move for a month!"

So it was settled. The Senator, campaigning from long habit, had already won Tom Temple and said steaks sounded good. But Irene begged him to think of mother.

"Why, Mother is all right," he insisted.

Irene fumed. "You never understand!"

The Senator resigned and climbed aboard his animal.

"Well anyway," Temple said agreeably, "you can figure to come back for the barbecue."

Breck groped for some excuse to ride again to Louise; yet knew that would be foolish. There was nothing. Besides, Irene was still close to him. She remained there as the party started on, and riding almost knee to knee gave him a sense of being hovered.

As so. as they had passed through Temple's gate and were in the forest, she burst with laughter. "Oh, my dear! That costume! Those boots! A real cowgirl!"

Breck faced her from his saddle. "Yes; a real girl."

She sobered. "I said cowgirl."

Suddenly her dark eyes surveyed him in disbelief. Disdain spread over her face. Her lip curled. "You don't mean it! Gordon, you're not really—in this primitive country I suppose it's called—courting her? Oh my, oh my. That's dreadful. Almost indecent."

Before Breck could answer she lashed her horse cruelly and loped ahead.

Rock House at sunset brought cries of wonder from the tourists, weary as they were. The train dropped out of the eastern notch and into a bowl of opal light, through which the grass bottom, the fences, the cabin far across appeared more as a bit of fairyland than a ranger station in the Sierra Nevadas.

Halfway into the meadow, Kit threw his ears forward and whinnied. The call was answered. Breck recognized Custer and smiled. But immediately there followed a chorus from mules braying further on, and then he saw Art Tillson bivouacked under a lone pine near the tourist pasture gate.

CHAPTER XIX

A rap on the cabin door aroused Breck from the table where he was writing out his week's report. The camp had been lifeless when he woke at daybreak, and he had taken his time to complete the diary. Glancing at his watch, he saw it was now ten o'clock.

"Come in!" he called.

The door opened. Art Tillson confronted him.

Breck stood up, and looking at the cowboy's face, was puzzled. He expected trouble. Instead, Art forced a grave expression to cover a queer grin. He had shaved very close. A few spots of powder clung to stubble that had not yielded to cold water and a dull blade.

"This is a ranger station, ain't it?" he demanded.

Breck nodded, making certain the boy was not drunk.

"And you give out information here, don't you?"

"What is it, Art?" Breck asked flatly.

Ossification of the Organs of a Living Person Odd Disease; Man's Eyes Affected

The eyes of a man in Pasadena are gradually turning to stone in his head.

Cases of ossification—when the tissues and organs of living persons turn to stone—are rare. Only 71 have been recorded in medical history—and of that number the case of the Pasadena man, referred to as "Mr. Z." by American medical authorities, is the only one known where the disease has affected the eyes, observers a writer in Pearson's London Weekly.

"Mr. Z." has been a victim of the disease since 1933. Complete ossification may take from 10 to 15 years. The only known cure is said to be the surgical removal of the parathyroid gland.

Recently an Australian was saved from being literally pressed to death by having a casing of stone round his heart chipped away by surgeons.

Not only the heart and the eyes may be attacked by stone deposit. Sometimes it is the lung. Rarely does the whole body become the field of the hardening process and the "living statue" become reality. But this is possible. A young American girl who was affected in this way died in 1934.

The disease is caused by over-activity of the parathyroid gland, which causes the transfer of the calcium from the bones to the soft tissues of the body. Everyone of us carries about within us a load, several stones in weight, of limestone, or potential limestone. Should this solidify in one mass, ossification sets in.

The disease is exemplified in a minor way when the lime settles out in organs, forming gallstones or kidney stones.

A case is known in New South Wales of a man's head growing three and a half inches all round owing to limestone deposits.

Nail-Cutting Superstition

There is a superstition that, when cutting the nails, unless one gathers up the fragments and burns or buries them, after death he will be sent back to look for them. A race track enthusiast, paring his nails at the track, was told this and warned to gather the pieces. "But, why should I?" smilingly answered the skeptic, "If I'm to be sent back to look for the pieces—what better place could be picked out than the track?"

PAUL WORKS A HARD FIELD

LESSON TEXT—Acts 18:1, 4-11; 1 Corinthians 2:1-5.
GOLDEN TEXT—I can do all things through Christ which strengtheneth me.—Philippians 4:13.

"Sissy!" That one word uttered with the depth of scorn of which only a school boy is capable, is enough to ruin the happiness of the one toward whom it is directed. The writer of these notes has a manly son of eight years of age who has many ambitions in his young heart, but one great fear, namely, that he may do something that will mark him as a "sissy." It is a commendable thing that boys should feel that way, provided, of course, that they are properly instructed in home and church so that they know that real manly courage does not mean being a ruffian or an ungodly person.

One could wish that more of that spirit were evident in the Christian Church. We really have all too many professed believers who are "soft"—afraid of the hard blows of life. These people tell young folk both by word and deed that Christianity is a religion for the soft-hearted and sentimental, when as a matter of fact it calls for all the red-blooded vitality of the strongest man and woman. Here is a place for the boy or girl, man or woman who has a backbone and the spirit of the pioneer. It is a great and glorious battle in which we are engaged. Paul knew it and lived it. In the progress of his ministry we find him at Athens (Acts 17), where a brilliant appeal to the philosophers of that place brought little result. From thence he comes to Corinth, one of the greatest and most wicked cities of the day. Here he meets a difficult task.

I. Human Inability (Acts 18:1, 4-8).

To call a man a "Corinthian" was to label him as a drunkard and a libertine. The town was really tough and Paul walked right into that impossible situation to preach the gospel. He naturally first went to the Jews in the synagogue, but when he preached Christ they made short work of putting him out. Rather we should say he very definitely separated himself from them. Consider the graphic picture in verse 6. But he didn't go far, he set up his testimony for Christ in the house next door, where God had a believer all prepared to receive him. The preacher of the truth may move, but he does not run away from God's appointed place.

Opposition was evidently keen, and as Paul came and went the leaders in the synagogue would probably meet him and make known their plans to destroy him. This, added to the opposition of the wicked city, was enough to discourage any man. He had some results (v. 8), but on the whole he had to struggle with the heartbreak of an impossible task. But the hour of man's extremity is the time of God's opportunity. There comes

II. Divine Encouragement (Acts 18:9-11).

God never tries His people beyond their ability to bear. It is not always given to His servants to have the assurance of success which came to Paul, but in all probability they do not face such staggering discouragement. In any case, those who have walked in the valley as well as on the mountain top with the Lord testify that He gives strength in the hour of weakness to all those who trust Him.

Paul was assured that no bodily harm would come to him and that he was not to think that he was alone, for there were many of God's people even in that wicked city. Safety and fellowship were thus assured, and none too soon, for almost at once a bitter persecution broke out against him. Read verses 12-17. Note that the assurance of God's protecting care does not mean that we shall escape trials and sorrows, but that we are to be kept in the midst of them.

III. The Secret of Victory (1 Cor. 2:15).

Looking back on his ministry in Corinth, Paul writes of the secret of his successful work there. This is a passage that every teacher and preacher of God's Word should prayerfully ponder. Eloquence, human wisdom, and self-confidence may be the basis of success in the things of the world, but not in the ministry of the gospel. How well we know that the most carefully reasoned and well-phrased message may be utterly flat and powerless, while the stumbling utterance from a heart full of the love and grace of God "becomes a fire and a searching and a burning, because the Holy Spirit catches it up and bears it upon the inner consciousness of men" (Morgan). The man who preaches without his soul atremble with the sacredness of his task, his own unworthiness, and an appreciation of the power of God, may be eloquent and learned, but he will accomplish little for God.

Dream Home to Be Feature At Coliseum Show

Prospective home owners will see their dream of a low-cost single-family home come true when they visit the National House and Garden Exposition opening Saturday, May 13, for a nine day run at the Coliseum. The house of wood construction will have two bedrooms, a living room, kitchen-dinette, bath, utility room and attached garage. The price will not be revealed until the opening of the show but it is expected to be less than $4,000.

Another home of interest to families in the medium and higher income brackets will be of the Ann Hathaway Cottage type with old English thatched roof, while still another will be of brick construction.
Ways and means of rebuilding and remodeling old homes will also be demonstrated at the exposition which is to be conducted with the cooperation of leading associations in the building material, architectural and home furnishing fields and civic groups.

Landscaping will also be stressed as essential to home beautification.
More than 20,000 square feet will be devoted to this purpose. The center of the main building will be converted into a beautiful vista with garden settings including shrubbery, plants, flowers and lawns. It will occupy more than 12,000 sq. feet.
Garden equipment and fountains modeled especially for the show will enhance the effects.

There will be a department for home crafters, an exhibit of rare and common species of fish by the Chicago Aquarium Society and an art display by the Chicago Business Men's Club.

Frankfort Board Observes Crime Prevention Week

During the past year the citizens of Illinois have been shocked by the horrible crimes committed by youth, many of them in their teens. The people of Illinois have been horrified by the exposure of immorality and delinquency found in our communities, in our schools and colleges. Never before has the situation demanded as much thinking as it does today.

Crime and delinquency are the outgrowths of conditions beneath the surface. We have learned thru past experiences that we cannot treat this problem superficially nor can we prescribe a treatment until we examine beneath the surface and locate the source of the trouble.

These atrocious crimes serve only to emphasize our obligation to protect and save the youth of our state from delinquent careers.

There are many men and women in Illinois who want to help by voluntary assistance, the efforts of the few organizations that have undertaken the fight—to combat the rapidly increasing menace of juvenile delinquency.

Our citizens see about them on all sides, youth—both boys and girls—entering upon a course that can end only in the criminal courts and our penal institutions.

Surely, there must be some method by which they may be saved and started upon the path that leads to good citizenship and an honorable career.

It is obvious to all that the control of juvenile delinquency means the control of adult crime; and our problems of jails and prisons would in a measure be met if we could reduce juvenile delinquency to a minimum.

Illinois is responding to the fight
—the prevention of delinquency—by statements thru the press, radio programs, resolutions introduced by public and private organizations interested in youth, sermons from our pulpits, and by judges, who are better qualified than all, to know the nature and geographic extent of delinquency in Illinois.

One agency alone cannot prevent crime; it requires the combined efforts of the home, school, church and all other resources of the community. Delinquency and crime are merely the persistent and costly results of community disorganization.

Now, therefore, I, John Stelle,
Lieutenant Governor and Acting Governor of the State of Illinois, do hereby, in view of the seriousness of the problem and the need for re-emphasizing of the critical situation, proclaim the week beginning May 7, of the present year as

CRIME PREVENTION WEEK for the State of Illinois, and request every community in Illinois to take inventory of its youth problems and also how these problems are being controlled. I urge schools, civic and fraternal groups, churches, youth agencies, recreation commissions, law enforcing agencies, radio stations, newspapers and every organization interested in youth, to aid in the fight—to prevent delinquency among youth. I wish as many persons as possible would attend the Delinquency Prevention Conference to be held in Waukegan, Illinois on May 8, 9 and 10, 1939.

Mokena Garden Club News

The program sponsored by the Mokena Garden Club last Friday evening was very well attended.

First prize in the amateur contest was awarded to Junior Benson and second prize, a tie between Jean Schevlin and Donna Bueschel.
The judges were Mrs. A. Kohl of Marley, Mrs. Geo. Schroeder and Mrs. Karl Walters of Frankfort.

The stainless steel kettle which was given by the Garden Club was awarded to Mrs. A. Braun.

The Club is very grateful for the fine co-operation of the citizens of Mokena. $28 were realized thru this show which shall be used for the old cemetery on Wolf Road.

Work has already been started there, by removing undesirable shrubs and trees. In order to speed up the work at the cemetery, it was decided that every member of the Garden Club should spend the afternoon of Friday May 12th there, helping in the cleaning and getting things ready for planting, so that this old historical site, will look respectable on Decoration Day.

The next meeting of the Club will be held in the home of Mrs. Gun-house on June 6th at which time all members are to meet at the depot at 12:15 to go to the Gunhouse home to enjoy a pot luck dinner in the lovely wood surrounding this home.

MILK BILL GETS 20 TO 0 OKEH OF LEGISLATORS

The state milk regulation and licensing bill, H. B. 483, was unanimously voted out by the House Agricultural Committee at Springfield this week with favorable recommendation, according to information received by the Cook County Farm Bureau from the Illinois Agricultural Association.

The vote of 20 to 0 came following a three-hour hearing in which opponents of the bill were heard. The House of Representatives of the General Assembly will convene as a Committee of the whole on Thursday, May 11, when speakers for and against the bill will be heard.

Milk producers who are sponsoring the bill point out that milk marketing boards, similar to that provided for in H. B. 483, are operating successfully in Wisconsin and Indiana as well as in some of the eastern states.

Nears 50-Year Mark But Still Seeks "500" Win

INDIANAPOLIS, Ind. — When prize-fighting got too tough Ira Hall, of the Terre Haute "sheriff aspirants" took up automobile racing and broke everything but his funny bone.

After ten years of competition in the big circuit, Hall, 47 years old but still packing a heavy foot, will be back in the annual 500-mile race at the Indianapolis Motor Speedway on May 30.

Hall used to trade punches with Packy McFarland in the old days but found the going too tough and went in for dirt-track driving at the Indiana fairs. He came to the "big top" at Indianapolis in 1928 and has been a consistent contender ever since although a seventh place in 1932 was his best finish. It was the only time he finished in the money — among the first ten.

However, he is the proud possessor of one of the coveted "sportsmanship awards" obtained in 1928 when his car crashed into the upper wall in the first turn and Hall pinned it to the upper concrete with his back for some 30 minutes to prevent it from rolling down into the fast-moving traffic. He will drive for Carl Magnee and Ted Nowiak.

Confidence— A National Asset

By RAYMOND PITCAIRN

In recent weeks the American people have been encouraged by various promises from Washington that steps will be taken to restore confidence in our national economy and our future.

Among these promises are included, for example, a cessation of attacks on the forces which promote production and employment, and a return to those principles of economy which would lighten the burdens of debt and taxation that now bear so heavily on the shoulders of all workers and earners.

To the American people the restoration of our traditional spirit of confidence seems a prime necessity. They realize, even if the politicians do not, that confidence is, in itself, a national asset, no less important than natural resources.

Confidence in the stability and the future of our productive activities is as essential to the national progress and well-being as are forests, mines and fields. Without confidence, America could never have developed from a small group of seaboard states to the greatest and the most productive land on earth.

Without it, America could never have established the high standards of living and the inspiring record of freedom and well-being for her people that now distinguish her among nations.

That which destroys confidence, therefore, destroys one of America's greatest assets. That which restores it, restores prosperity and happiness.

America today has the resources, the skill and the energy to resume the traditional progress which recent handicaps have halted. It needs only confidence to go ahead. And this confidence must be based on more than the familiar and repeated promises. It demands action by Congress and the Administration to make those promises good.

If Washington keeps its pledge, if production is freed of its shackles, if the voices of hate and fear are stilled, then America can look forward to a renewal and a quickening of prosperity such as her natural wealth and the enterprise of her workers assure.

Today, the American people are poised on the mark and ready to go. What they ask is that Washington clear the track of the extravagance, the borrowed theories and the political maneuverings that block the course.

What they demand is an ending of assaults on that spirit of confidence which in the past has been the strength and the hope of their nation.

BOGGED DOWN

TRUTH about ADVERTISING

By CHARLES B. ROTH

WHAT ABOUT PRICE?

"A WOMAN," once remarked the famed Hoosier humorist Abe Martin, "will buy anything she thinks the store is losing money on."

That was merely a funnyman's way of saying that in all our buying price is a most important consideration—the one thing with which we are concerned every time we spend a cent.

Now what really constitutes price and how are prices established? Without getting too deep into economic principles, we know that prices are established by what is called the law of supply and demand.

This law teaches us that when the demand for anything exceeds the supply, prices go up. Conversely, when supply is plentiful but demand is light, prices go down. But how can we as customers know that this law won't be tampered with and men, shrewd, scheming and selfish, step in and raise prices and gouge us by making us pay them? They could, you know, and we would not be any the wiser.

Our safeguard against this is the advertising we see in the newspapers. That protects us. Under our competitive system of buying and selling, one merchant vies with another merchant for our trade. Each comes out publicly in the newspapers with his price. We consult these prices before we buy.

Seen in this light, advertising becomes the informant that prevents dishonest sellers from taking advantage of us and our ignorance of prices we might have to pay.

A recent mystery drama has the villain contriving to plunge the city into complete darkness for one night, so that he and his henchmen can dash in and make away with their loot. "We who have something dastardly to put over," he observed, "must needs fear the light."

High prices, skimpy quality, gyp products also must needs fear the light. That is why they are cloaked in such phrases as: "We don't advertise. We pass the savings along to you." "Why pay the high cost of advertising? We put it into our goods," etc., etc.

But the merchant who advertises uses the light of advertising, and asks you to compare his goods and his prices and to find out before you buy. You can always pay his price, because it is the right price. That you know because the protective power of advertising has told you that it is.

And this protective power of advertising is working for you every time you unfold your newspaper and read an advertisement. That black print on white represents a buying guide which is worth several hundred dollars a year to you and your family.

Use Less Paint

LOWE BROTHERS HIGH STANDARD HOUSE PAINT costs less per square foot of surface painted and outlasts ordinary paints—both of these merits are due to its high quality. Some low-grade paints analyzed by recognized laboratories were found to contain 63% of water and other evaporating liquids. This left only 37% of film-forming solids to protect the surface. Lowe Brothers High Standard Liquid Paint contains 90% of protective film-forming solids. Be sure of better results and more pleasing effects before you paint. Come in and see Lowe Brothers Pictorial Color Chart showing actual painted reproductions of new and modern color schemes.

HOMER

Ten of the local ladies met in the Goodings grove hall Tuesday and spent the day re-decorating the entrance and the three rooms upstairs. Friday of this week the work will be completed. A pot luck dinner was enjoyed at noon.

Marilyn Rowley of plainfield spent the week end with her aunt and uncle, Mr. and Mrs. Robt. Burch. Mrs. Owen Ott and infant daughter returned from Silver Cross hospital Thursday.

Mr. and Mrs. Jerome Boyce are parents of a baby girl, born in Silver cross hospital Wednesday.

Mr. and Mrs. Glenn Carroll, daughter and son of Russell, Kansas have been spending the past week with relatives here.

Mrs. John Parker and Mrs. Ben Ingersoll have been appointed to have charge of the program for the May meeting of the Royal Neighbors of Goodings Grove.

The Ladies' Missionary Society met in the home of Mrs. Hal Reed Thursday, with Mrs. Helen Rowley as co-hostess. Fourteen members were present. A potluck dinner was served at noon.

Guests in the home of Mr. and Mrs. Guy Bump Friday evening were, the Mesdames Bath, Freter Button and children Jewel and Joan of Joliet.

Don't forget the Orland Park Legion Post is sponsoring a "Jitterbug" dance on Saturday night, May 6 at Goodings grove hall.

An officers training school from all surrounding 4-H clubs was held in the Ottawa St. M. E. church parlors Tuesday evening. Those present from the Homer clubs were Mrs. Wm. Lister, Mrs. John Homering, Miss Viola Hamstengel, Dorothy Moore, Otto Konow, Earl Kopleman LaVerne Schubert, Joseph and Geo. Brankey.

Miss Phyllis Manning and her pupils sponsored a card party in the school house Tuesday. Bunco, euchre and pinocle were played and prizes were awarded. The older children of the school sold hot-dogs, pop, candy and gum.

Mr. and Mrs. Henry Rodgers and daughter, Rita were dinner guests in the Fred Irvine home at Lemont Sunday.

The Homer Home Helpers 4-H Club met with Eleanor Kopelman Saturday afternoon. Patterns and materials were discussed in the clothing course and in the food division, it was decided to study cookies and salads. Two new officers were elected: Recreational chairman, Eleanor Kopelman and Reporter, Dorothy Moore with Rose Brankey alternating. Three new members were added to the club: Rita Hilert, Katie Warnsholt and Ebba Homering. The next meeting will be in the Kessler home in Goodings Grove as Andrew Welter has kindly consented to let the girls use the rooms during the summer months for their work. All girls are urged to have their patterns and materials at this time, Saturday afternoon, May 20 at 1 o'clock.

The Modern Woodmen meeting was held Wednesday night. After the usual business meeting, Wm. Lister and John Welter served the boys delicious chop suey.

Mr. and Mrs. Chas. Jensen and Charlene, Mr. and Mrs. John West and children and Mrs. Emma West visited Sunday with the latter's brother in law, Fred West and family in Rockford.

The spring tri-annual of the County Community Club League will be held on Friday, May 12 at the Willow Ave. Presbyterian church in Joliet. The Joliet club will act as hostess. Mrs. Fred Blodgett, garden chairman announces that there will be a flower exhibit and instead of judges as heretofore, judging will be by popular vote. The exhibit of wild flowers will be judged by the number of varieties of flowers, the houseplants and bouquets in appropriate containers, will be judged by their general appearance. All exhibits must have the owners name in sealed envelopes attached. Members are urged to exhibit if possible. There will also be a sale of seeds and plants, if anyone has any that they care to sell.

Anti-Feminine Tradition Given Trouncing by 500-Mile Champion

INDIANAPOLIS, Ind.—Floyd Roberts, the big nut and bolt man from Van Nuys California, dared the anti-feminine tradition of the track to win last year's 500-mile race at the Indianapolis Motor Speedway.

For years race drivers have shied away from women as far as their business operations were concerned. Women are barred from the garage section at Indianapolis and to drive a woman in a race car, so the drivers held, was certain hard luck of the "double-in-spades" kind.

But a cute little French movie actress, Olympe Bradna, on a personal appearance tour, stopped in Indianapolis early last April and visited the track the day Lou Moore and Roberts appeared with their Burd Special. Nothing would do but that Olympe should christen the new car. The starlet's press agent quickly produced a bottle of champagne to crack over the front axle. Olympe wired Roberts congratulations when he won the pole position with a speed of 125.681 miles per hour, and wired flowers when he won the competition. Roberts used to pound rivets in an airplane factory in California.

Gas Refrigerator

IT'S PERMANENTLY SILENT because it has no moving parts in its freezing system

Since the Servel Electrolux refrigerator operates on gas, a single burner takes the place of moving, wearing parts . . . a tiny flame circulates the refrigerant, without wear or noise.

These are important advantages in themselves, but equally important are the other results that you get in refrigeration freezing without moving parts . . . the fact that the low operating cost is never increased, that Servel gives you more years of service, and actually can save enough in food alone to pay for itself.

Ask your friends and neighbors who own Servels what they think of gas refrigeration . . . then, before you decide, get all the facts about Servel Electrolux "the gas refrigerator you hear about but never hear!"

NOW AT NEW LOW PRICES!

Last year in the Chicago Metropolitan area, sales of Servel Electrolux Gas Refrigerators were double those of any previous year. Here's proof that it's worth while to investigate the Gas Refrigerator.

Special Hospital Day Observance

On Friday, May 12, more than three quarters of a million workers in the nation's seven thousand hospitals will act as hosts to the American public. National Hospital Day was established eighteen years ago to bring hospitals into closer contact with the communities they serve. To encourage public interest in hospitals and their work; to maintain old friendships and build new foundations of faith; and to pay a deserved tribute to a beloved leader in hospital development—Florence Nightingale.

One of the outstanding programs of the day will be held at the Hinsdale Sanitarium and Hospital where at mid afternoon Homer E. Capehart, vice president of Rudolph Wurlitzer Company will speak. Mr. Capehart is an orator of national prominence and has become known as the champion of the cause of "private initiative." He will present a message to the thousands of visitors attending the open house at Hinsdale that is of vital importance to all Americans at this time. In addition to this highlight of the afternoon will be music by radio artists and several fifty piece bands.

Perhaps the most fascinating feature will be the unique and amazing demonstrations of the appliances used in the modern care of the sick. Motor driven "seesaw" beds to aid those suffering from heart and circulatory ailments; a nearly first showing of a new respirator for the artificial respiration of those afflicted with paralysis; instruments that bend light to penetrate into the darkened depths of ones' inner self are but a few of the many articles that will interest thousands. Inspection of the departments of the hospital will augment scores of exhibits by such famous organizations as the American Medical Association. Plan for Hospital Care, National Safety Council as well as national air lines dietetic firms and health bureaus. Motion pictures on many phases of health and better living will have their individual showings. Not only is the whole afternoon's program absolutely free, but attendance prizes will also be given. A candid camera contest of the day's events will also bring cash awards to some lucky camera fan, so bring along your cameras. Those unable to visit Hinsdale on Friday will find the exhibits and demonstration open for inspection Sunday May 14. One never knows when disease or disaster will strike, get acquainted with your hospital and its personnel now as a visitor and not as a patient.

Students Enroll In Tuberculosis Education Program

Seventh and eighth grade students of Arbor Park School of Oak Forest, enrolled this week in a school tuberculosis education program designed to "Help Make the Future Safe from Tuberculosis."

Part of the nation-wide Early Diagnosis Campaign being conducted during April, the school project is sponsored by the Tuberculosis Institute of Chicago and Cook County Bureau of Public Health Division.

Each student enrolled in the project first will study the methods used in controlling tuberculosis, according to Miss Eleanor Gallagher, Rural Public Health nurse for Oak Forest. The student will complete the project by writing a radio script on "Why I Should Have A Tuberculosis Test."

A script representative of the best work of each class will be sent to the Tuberculosis Institute. Pins bearing the double-barred cross, international symbol of the fight against tuberculosis, and certificates

PALOS PARK

Palos Spoolsters, sewing club, will meet in the home of Patricia Saunders, Friday evening May 4th.

It was suggested at the last meeting that each member make a dress to represent the club. However each is asked to bring their favorite dress patterns to the next meeting and they will decide then as to the pattern. It was also suggested, each girl should get samples of different colors of material and the club will vote on a suitable color. The members at the present time are doing embroidery and crochet work during their meetings.

Builders Tee Golf Club held their first tournament of the season at the Oak Hills Golf club last Tuesday with about 75 members of the club taking part.

Blue Island Golf Association held their first tournament at Oak Hills on April 26th.

Palos Woman's Club is planning a country luncheon to be held May 18 in the home of Mrs. Paul McCaskey.

Ladies Aid Society of the Community Church held a pot luck dinner in the recreation room of the church last Tuesday.

Red Cross, Surgical Dressing class will be entertained May 10th in the home of Mrs. Lester H. Lannyon.

of recognition will be awarded classes participating.

The local schools are among more than fifty Cook County schools enrolled in the program.

The Early Diagnosis Campaign is a nation-wide drive to search out tuberculosis in its early stages. At present eight out of every ten patients admitted to sanatoria for treatment are in advanced stages of the disease when treatment is started. This fact keeps the death rate needlessly high. The Early Diagnosis Campaign urges every child and adult to "Help Find Early Tuberculosis" by Tuberculin tests and X-ray examinations.

TINLEY PARK

The Ladies Aid Society of the Zion Lutheran church will sponsor a card and bunco party Wednesday May 18.

AMERICAN LEGION AUXILIARY
American Legion Auxiliary, Unit 615 of Tinley Park celebrated Past Presidents' Night Friday evening April 28, in the PTA room of the school. Meeting was called to order by the president, Viola Carr. Immediately following a patriotic opening service, initiation of new members was had. The following were initiated: Mrs. Marie Hagedorn and daughter Margaret, Lois Wallin, Esther Robinson, Jentle O'Brien, Dena Hansen, Edna Clark and Gertrude Jacobs.

On behalf of the American Legion Auxiliary Department of Illinois, the president welcomed the new members to membership in our Unit.

Mrs. Trudie Swisher announced Helen Flannery as the winner of the silk hose contest having brought twelve pounds of hose to the meeting. Her reward was a tourist iron.

Mrs. Dena Hansen was appointed the new Ways and Means Chairman. She exhibited the quilt, pieced by Nellie Whitfield and presented to the Unit. The next business meeting will be at Dena Hansen's home Friday May 12.

After the close of meeting the Past Presidents led in the March to the dining tables which were trimmed in spring colors. The center of the long table was a ground of soft green to represent a spring garden lawn; the candles were of deep yellow representing the warm sunshine and the favors were lucky umbrellas to keep away the rain drops. They were made of gum drops, stick candy and cellophane, and were of many hues. They stood in water lily cups made from paper napkins. These were also of different hues.

The Past Presidents sat at a table especially prepared for them. A huge cake trimmed with yellow roses and the words "Welcome Past Presidents" graced the center of their table. Past Presidents honored were: Frances Rowden, Marge West, Min Felten, Trudie Swisher, Ruth Frietag and Mamie Brandau. The Junior Past President Mamie Brandau was presented with a gift of a relish dish from the Unit and also cut the Past President's cake.

Pineapple salad, Ritz cookies, cake and coffee were the refreshments.

Those responsible for the evening's fun were: President Viola Carr, chairman; Blanch Carr, musician; Jentle O'Brien, Esther Robinson and Myrtle Wolf, co-hostesses. "The Umbrella Man" was sung and much enjoyed by everyone.

EXTRA—Don't forget the "Turtle" races given by the Tinley Park Post 615 Saturday and Sunday, May 6 and 7. The Auxiliary is sponsoring "Thunder" in the second race Sunday May 7 3:30 p. m. We want you there to root for Thunder. Blanch Carr, Pub. Chairman.

This is an answer to the article in your paper saying that only eleven votes defeated the recreation project. I wish to say that the bill was defeated by 22 votes by solid honest tax paying citizens who were not and are not in favor of the project. The kids in Tinley Park have everything they need. The school has a good playground. The baseball diamond is all right. If they hadn't been so destructive they would be able to have a swimming place. They let the tennis court which the Lutherans were kind enough to give them grow up in weeds. Why should we taxpayers pay good money for something the kids will wreck? Years ago kids played where they could and worked hard and were glad to get the chance. Now kids don't do anything and expect us tax paying citizens to provide them with a place to waste time. I notice Harry Trevarthen isn't saying anything since election is over. Why doesn't he say what he thinks? Maybe he sees that Tinley citizens aren't going to vote for any foolishness.

KAMPE'S BIRTHDAY PARTY
'Twas the 29th of April
A lovely springtime night,
The wind was gently blowing,
And the moon was shining bright.

It was Arthur Kampe's birthday. So the 4H thought it fun. Since surprises were in order, He also should have one.

So that evening they all gathered
At Kampe's fine estate,
With eats and gifts in plenty
All feeling fine and great.

Just how surprised he really was
I am not sure to tell,
Altho his knees trembled,
He stood the ordeal well.

Now we wonder if young Neimeyer
Will get a limosine
That will hold at least ten people
To go riding on the green.

And why is it that Steinborn
Held his hand upon his eye,
Why handkerchiefs mopped foreheads,
Why the water pail was dry?

And why a certain fellow
Fell in love and got a crush
On a lovely brown eyed maiden
And made her blush and blush?

And how was it that Bernie
Made folks feel gay and grand
Was it the song "Deep Purple"
Or was it "Ferdinand"?

Why the window was so busy,
Why the curtain was moved in,
Why upon some feet were blisters
And why some soles were thin?

Why a certain fine young lady Nail polish had to find
Why some one got so dizzy
When they did the grapevine twine?

We wonder if Art Kampe
Will have the stomachache
From all the things he plans to eat
From socks to birthday cake?

And when a certain lady
Gets to dance with those she missed
And when a lovely pretty girl
Will bestow the birthday kiss?

Why some folks went home early
When the fun had just begun?
Why Wally Keuch had to be sick?
Why Garry didn't come?

At what hour was the clock turned
To daylight saving time?
Just how long did the party last?
And who wrote this silly rhyme?
All.

CARD OF THANKS

We wish to take this means of publicly acknowledging our appreciation and thanks to the Tinley Park Fire department and neighbors who so willingly came to our aid during the recent fire at our home.

BERNICE SHEPARD, MR. AND MRS. GEO. HASSETT

YOUTH SPEAKS

Casual remarks are passed from time to time about "the good old days". However in most cases the speaker is now using the conveniences of the present day. Does he not use the radio, the utilities, electricity and water and does he not drive an automobile instead of a horse and buggy? The good old days? Good?

And remember when the streets and vacant lots were used for base ball diamonds and the annual breakage of somebody's window? Remember when you skated on somebody's pond but also recall that you took a chance on "getting a soaker" because of lack of supervision?

Some things have changed. Gas and lights are used instead of cook stove and oil lamps. Radios bring news into the homes much faster than telephones and weekly newspapers. The automobile has entirely replaced the horse and buggy.

But...the youth of Tinley Park still depend on somebody's pond to skate on, whether dangerous or not. They still take the chance of breaking somebody's window for a good clean game of base ball. None of these things have changed. A stagnation in providing activity for youngsters in Tinley Park has taken place.

We're willing to shange this. Are you?

ALL DRESSED UP FOR THE WORLD'S FAIR

Already the dairy barn is built; some of the cattle selected, and definite plans have been made for taking 150 of the finest dairy cattle of North America to the New York World's Fair. In the above picture is shown the ground-breaking party that started the project on its way. The calves came to represent the five dairy breeds which will participate and from left to right they are Guernsey, Jersey, Brown-Swiss, Holstein, and Ayrshire.

The folks with them are: (Left to right) George M. Waugh, Jr., executive vice-president, The Borden Company; Wm. F. Fretz (petting calf), representing the American Guernsey Cattle Club; Lou Morley, Secretary, American Jersey Cattle Club; Everett Waddy, Jr., representing the Brown-Swiss Association; D. N. Boice, representing the Brown-Swiss Association; Theodore G. Taft's Gridiron dinner speech didn't do much for his presidential ambitions... Two schools of thought on the subject of a European war... Sabre shaking here might help to keep peace there... New Dealers present another of their brilliant ideas in the new job fixed for Edward J. Noble.

WASHINGTON.—It is not permitted to repeat anything said in a speech made at a Gridiron dinner, though from time to time history has actually been made by speeches at the gatherings of that organization. But there is no ban on the comments of guests following the dinner.

Consensus is that Sen. Robert A. Taft did not do his presidential ambitions any good by his speech at the recent dinner. As a matter of fact, one diner actually congratulated Thomas E. Dewey on Taft's speech!

Dewey, incidentally, who spoke at the December Gridiron dinner, had a much better break all around than Taft. In the first place, President Roosevelt did not reply to Dewey. He did not really make a speech at all, just a few pleasant remarks at the end of the dinner. After Taft's speech, however, the President made a real speech, which, according to comments of guests afterwards, was a very good one.

In the case of Dewey the club followed its customary practice of having one speaker from each of the major parties, but, the President not wishing to make a regular talk, James A. Farley had to carry the load for the Democrats. Farley was in a tough spot. He had to make a speech to which the President would listen, which meant that he had to be very careful about what he said.

General opinion afterward was that Jim did not do himself justice, which made Dewey's spot all the more attractive.

A curious phase of all this is that the President actually feels rather friendly, personally, toward Taft, and dislikes Dewey very much indeed, yet as a result of his own actions Dewey was helped and Taft was hurt before gatherings of tremendous political importance.

Taft's Economic Views Anathema to New Dealers

Roosevelt is so politically minded that it is just possible he "planned it that way." Taft may be personally more agreeable to the New Dealers than Dewey, but his economic views are anathema. It is very obvious that most of the New Dealers have been moving heaven and earth to discredit the Ohio senator for months. Taft in the White House, with a sympathetic congress, is just the last thing the New Dealers would want to see. It might, as they see it, bring about a reaction in their favor, which would sweep them back into power four years later, but they shiver at what he would do to their social and economic "reforms" in the meantime.

Many of the tycoons present at the Gridiron dinner were terribly disappointed. They have been agreeing with so much that Taft has been saying, in his speeches, statements and radio talks, that the Ohio senator had obtained a considerable following for his candidacy in downtown New York, and in the financial districts of most of the big cities of the country.

They not only liked his views, but his magnificent showing in Ohio against New Deal Sen. Robert J. Bulkley.

But since the Gridiron dinner they are remembering Alfred M. Landon, whose views also they agreed with. In fact they remember sadly the points the Kansas governor made in his 1936 speeches. But they also remember the deadly dullness of his speeches—how he drove away votes every time the radio carried his voice. Which is not so good at the moment for Mr. Taft's chances.

Two Schools of Thought As to a European War

President Roosevelt is being sharply criticized for his warlike utterances, even attacked for "gambling" on getting this nation involved in casualty lists. But there is a school of thought, to which many friends and many opponents of the New Deal subscribe 100 per cent, that the more certain Mr. Roosevelt can make Hitler and Mussolini that the United States will enter the war on the side of Britain and France, if and when war comes, the less chance there will be of a big European war.

Even more important, those holding this view believe that if the opposite is done—that is if Hitler and Mussolini can be convinced that the United States will remain neutral, the probability of war is increased, and the probability that the United States will eventually be sucked into it will become much greater.

The theory behind the support that President Roosevelt gets on this issue, on which he is being opposed by most Republican leaders and by a great many Democrats, is very simple. We start with the assumption that war is not absolutely certain—that it may be that a sufficient number of factors can prevent it—that Hitler and Mussolini are not absolutely determined to keep on until they force a general conflict.

If this assumption is not correct, then nothing matters very much. There will be war, and eventually the United States will be drawn into it. In that case nothing said at this time by President Roosevelt or anybody else is important. Only what is done by way of preparation is important.

But if the assumption is correct, then it would seem obvious that the more strength Hitler and Mussolini know is going to be thrown to their enemies the more chance there is that they may decide not to risk the consequences of war.

Sabre Rattling in U. S. Might Help Keep the Peace

There are several theories which seem to reinforce the argument. For example, it is believed by most army officers here that if war comes the power of Hitler will at once become very much curtailed. The German army does not recognize Hitler as a military genius. It has been backing him right along because of his demonstrated hold on the people, and because of his demonstrated power as a bluffer in international negotiations. But with the coming of war, it is held, he would be sidetracked and ignored. The prestige resulting from the early victories—most army officers think the early conflicts would be German victories—would go to the men who directed the troop movements.

Pretty soon a new Hindenburg or a new Ludendorff would be the popular hero of Germany. The thought is that Hitler must know this, and would be scarcely human if he relished the idea. Hence the longer he can win victories by sabre rattling, instead of actual military encounters, the longer he remains No. 1 man in Germany and retains practically dictatorial powers.

Noble's New Job Another Bright New Deal Idea

No one is ever going to say that the New Dealers do not have ideas. They reek with them. One of the most interesting involves the reasons for the sudden elevation of Edward J. Noble, administrator of the civil aeronautics authority, to assist in administration's program for the promotion of business recovery as undersecretary of the department of commerce, a new position which congress will be asked to create.

The answer, it is explained, can be found in a public statement made by Mr. Noble the day before his appointment. In brief, Mr. Noble, in the eyes of President Roosevelt and Secretary of Commerce Harry L. Hopkins, has made a huge success in applying government regulation to one industry—the air lines—which are highly competitive and alive with individual initiative.

So the theory is that Mr. Noble, having accomplished this with air lines, can spread out over all lines of business his supervision and coordination, and bring about the ideal economic state visualized by Roosevelt and Hopkins—no monopoly, plenty of competition, plenty of individual initiative, and yet complete regulation and control by a beneficent government!

In the public statement in question, Mr. Noble dwelt at length on the record made by the air lines during the last winter. The lines, he pointed out, flew more than 64,000,000 passenger miles for each passenger fatality between December 21 last and March 20. There was but one fatal accident in that period, during which the lines flew 17,863,270 plane miles. The statement also pointed out that the three transcontinental lines and the principal north-south line flew 50,000,000 passenger miles this winter without a single forced landing.

After recounting this record Mr. Noble said:

Turns It Into Boost for Government Regulation

"These figures present a striking example of the way a highly competitive business, in a stage of highly individual initiative, can co-operate with government regulation and get results."

Much further down in the same statement Mr. Noble said: "It seems to me that the lesson is obvious. Sane and wise application of our regulatory laws not only protects the public but at the same time enhances the profit of the business. Long experience has shown—and it is shown strikingly in the air transport industry—that only through the co-operative services of the government can this kind of regulation produce a result that protects everybody, both the enterprise and the citizen. I wish other business men in this new day might learn that the air transport industry has learned so well, and applied so well, on the record it presents here today."

A critical examination of all this might produce just a little skepticism. In the first place, it is pointed out, the railroads also can make a magnificent showing so far as passenger miles per fatality are concerned. But this "proof" that government regulation of highly competitive enterprises is not calculated to appeal to investors. The financial situation of the railroads, to put it mildly, is not bright.

Also critics are inclined to think that fate had more to do with the small number of fatalities in the air service this winter than government regulation.

Hainan Island, Taken by Japs Inhabited by Aboriginal Tribes

Strategic Land Held by China for Past 2,000 Years

Prepared by National Geographic Society,
Washington, D. C.—WNU Service.

First important break in Chinese ownership of Hainan island, southernmost possession of China, for more than 2,000 years, came with the recent landing of Japanese troops on the island. The island lies in the Gulf of Tonkin whose shores are formed by the southern part of the Chinese mainland and by the northern part of French Indo-China.

Ever since the Chinese conquest of the flat coastal regions in 111 B. C., Hainan has been Chinese. There now are more than 2,000,000 Chinese on the island but most of them live in the coastal zone. The mountainous region in the interior is the domain of the Loïs, aboriginal tribesmen who have refused to be dominated by outsiders.

Because of Hainan's lack of modern development, it is of little present commercial value to any country. The climate is tropical and coconuts, pineapples, mangoes, bananas, breadfruit, oranges, sugar, and rice thrive, but a comparatively small area of the island has been cultivated. The forests are rich in hardwoods, including mahogany, but there has been no extensive lumbering operation. There are known deposits of gold, silver, tin, and reports of the discovery of copper, lead, iron and coal deposits, but mining has been done only on a small scale.

Strategically, however, the island is important. It places Japanese forces within 1,500 miles of Britain's new naval base at Singapore. A modern transport airplane could take off from Hainan and land in French Indo-China after an hour's flight; and a flight to Manila would take only about 3½ hours. In fast battle planes, those times could be halved.

The Loïs tribesmen are partially responsible for Hainan's economic plight. They inhabit small villages in the inland mountains, to which they were pushed back by Chinese immigration. Most of the tribesmen have managed to avoid coming under Chinese control.

Loïs customs have not changed for centuries. Three blue tattoo rings are worn on their left hands to protect them from smallpox. Charms are generously worn to ward off evil spirits; and the medicine men are highly respected as devil chasers. Like their ancestors, the Loïs of today do not use hooks when they fish. Instead, they dam a river, pour into the stream poisonous juices from roots, and easily spear the stupefied fish.

Staid London Drops Tradition, Eats Yankee Salad, Ice Cream

Big Restaurant Chain Notes Transition in Englishmen's Diet

Prepared by National Geographic Society,
Washington, D. C.—WNU Service.

Simple qualities of old-fashioned English cooking are not disguised, as in Paris, by fancy names and sauces. Unlike the French, the English do not feel that inventing a tasty new dish is more important to mankind than discovering a new star. But somewhere in London the epicure may easily find any continental dish, be it Italian, French, German, or Greek. There are Indian restaurants, too, like Vereswamy's, where retired army men go for curry and rice.

London has as great a variety of eating places as any world city—except Paris. You can easily find American hot cakes and corn on the cob.

Dense populations of recent times have brought the rise of large industries which import vast amounts of food, prepare and distribute it. Conspicuous is the Lyons company of London. It operates over 250 eating places, a string of hotels, employs 30,000 people, and uses nearly 2,000 trucks to deliver food.

"In the 40 years of its life, our pioneer cafe at 213 Piccadilly has fed over 35,000,000 people," said an official of this company. "Some guests, young men when we started, still dine with us."

"We have seen changes in London's eating habits. During our first year, we served only 40 dishes of ice cream a day; now we sell as many as 3,000,000. Curiously, about 70 per cent of all our customers ask for vanilla flavor. When this fact was ferreted out by reporters, a perfect spate of letters followed, many to the Times, wanting to know why people didn't eat more strawberry, lemon, etc."

"Take salad. Years ago we served none at all. Now our customers eat half a million dishes a day."

"Weather, of course, affects human habits. Our weather expert makes his final decision between three and five every morning. The change point in diet lies between 50 and 60 degrees. Fifty is on the cold side and people start to order more soup, hot entrees, stewed steak, hot sweets, suet dumplings, and jam rolls. Sixty is the beginning of a milder spell. Then demands upon the cold counters and ice cream increase."

So huge is this firm's tea business that it pays one-sixth of the whole tea duty collected in the United Kingdom, and sells more than 1,250,000 packages of tea a day!

At this company's Greenford factory sits a line of tasters. These men of keen palates may taste a thousand different brews a day. Samples of drinking water from different places in the world are tested and tea blends are made up to suit each locality.

track when he packed and stored limes and dried grapes.

This vitamin problem is only one of the many studied in Lyons' laboratory, with its 150 chemists. They not only test flour dough and other foods for nutrition value, but make bacteriological examinations of fish, meat, and poultry.

What to Eat and Why

C. Houston Goudiss Considers the Question: How Often Shall We Eat? Suggests That Some People May Benefit by More Than Three Meals

By C. HOUSTON GOUDISS

ONE of the questions I am frequently asked is whether or not it's advisable to eat between meals. Any answer must take into consideration a number of factors. It is true that many people experience a desire for food in mid-morning, mid-afternoon or before going to bed. Some begin to nibble as soon as they feel hungry, and often they continue to eat in excess of their needs. Others, trained to more self-restraint, refrain from eating, because they have been brought up with the idea that no food should be eaten except at regular meals.

Unfortunately, it frequently occurs that neither procedure is based upon actual food requirements.

Consider the Day's Food Needs

In arriving at any decision concerning between-meal eating, the day's ration should be regarded as a whole. If the foods served at breakfast, dinner and lunch or supper are carefully chosen, with a view to meeting bodily requirements, there should be no need for many adults to eat between meals.

On the other hand, it should be borne in mind that dividing the day's food into what we Americans so often call "three square meals," is primarily a convenient custom. One reason that it has grown up over a period of years is because it allows the maximum free time to pursue our various occupations. In a number of countries, a fourth meal is an accepted part of the day's routine. No Englishman, for example, would consider going without his afternoon tea; and workers pause in offices, stores and factories, as well as at home, for a brief rest and welcome refreshment.

How Many Meals?

In recent years, several scientists have advanced the idea that some of us may benefit by eating more than three meals. At a leading university a few years ago, two distinguished investigators concluded that smaller and more frequent meals would promote general health and well-being for many types of individuals. They suggested lighter meals, but proposed as many as four, five, or even six feedings a day.

Another well-known authority has performed various experiments which effectively demonstrate that a light additional meal in mid-afternoon, consisting principally of a milk beverage, increased the efficiency of workers and helped to reduce fatigue.

Relieving Late Afternoon Fatigue

Many people experience a tired feeling about four o'clock in the afternoon. During the working day, they gradually utilize available food energy, so that by late afternoon, the supply may be greatly reduced—along with both mental and physical energy.

Here is a case where eating between meals is regarded as a decided advantage, provided the food is carefully chosen. A glass of milk and a few crackers, or some other carbohydrate food, will help to renew energy, relieve the feeling of fatigue and bridge the gap to dinner. It must be remembered, however, that the extra meal should be composed of light, easily digested foods so as not to destroy appetite for the following meal.

Young Children and Elderly People

Children of certain ages, as well as adults, may benefit by a schedule that includes an extra meal. Very young children—in the toddler stage—are frequently given a mid-morning feeding of orange juice, or a mid-afternoon cup of milk with one or two crackers. And some school children also make better weight gains if they pause in the middle of the morning, or take an after-school snack, of fruit juice, or milk, and crackers.

Aged persons often require more than three meals. That is because large, heavy meals might overtax their digestions, and three light meals do not usually provide adequate nourishment. For this reason, nutritionists advise that they have a light, mid-afternoon pickup of a hot beverage and crackers; and perhaps a cup of hot bouillon before going to bed.

Don't Overeat

Thus, it is evident that there are numerous instances when there is justification for departing from the accepted routine. But it must be remembered that as the number of meals is increased, the amount of food taken at each one should be decreased. Otherwise, an undue strain may be placed upon the digestive organs.

Then, too, no matter how the day's food is divided, it must provide all the substances required for sound nutrition. Otherwise, the body will be improperly nourished, no matter how many meals are consumed.

The diet should be built first of all around the protective foods—milk, eggs, fruits and vegetables, which are such an important source of necessary minerals and vitamins. It must also supply protein for growth and repair, carbohydrates and fats for adequate energy, and sufficient bulk or cellulose to promote normal elimination.

Keep the Diet Balanced

Whether you serve three hearty meals and forego eating between times, or follow the plan of providing a mid-morning or mid-afternoon pickup, you should meet the requirements for a balanced diet. This, you will remember from previous discussions, includes a pint of milk for each adult, a quart for every child; an egg for each member of the family, or at least three or four weekly; one serving of a whole grain cereal; one serving of meat, fish or chicken plus a second source of protein, such as meat, nuts or dried beans or peas; two vegetables besides potatoes, one of which should be of the leafy green variety; two fruits or one fruit and one fruit juice.

TIPS to Gardeners

Changing Methods

CERTAIN garden practices widely followed a generation ago have now been proved unwise.

Gardeners formerly allowed vegetables to grow as large as possible. According to Harold N. Coulter, vegetable expert of the Ferry Seed Breeding Station, this practice gave a higher yield in pounds, but very often lowered the quality of the vegetables.

Some vegetables, of course, like tomato, must be mature to be palatable; but carrots, cucumbers, beets, summer squash, turnips, radishes and others are more tender and tasty when not much more than half grown.

To keep a regular supply of vegetables of proper eating size, gardeners are finding also that it is advisable to plant often than once or twice a year. Gardens prove more enjoyable and more profitable when successive plantings of favorite crops are made every two or three weeks, providing garden-fresh vegetables for the table over a long season.

Few gardeners nowadays save flower seeds. Fine flowers growing in the home garden often are cross-pollinated by others of the same species, making flowers grown from their seed inferior and untrue.

Texas Offers Garner for President But 'Cactus Jack' Holds His Tongue

Recuperating Congress Discovers Leader in 37-Year Veteran

By THOMAS WALKER

They used to tell the story of a woman who had two sons. One went to sea and the other became vice president of the United States. Neither was heard from again.

But Cactus Jack Garner is not like Alexander Throttlebottom, the musical comedy vice presidential candidate who ran on the ticket with one Mr. Wintergreen in "Of Thee I Sing."

For six long years the Sage of Uvalde has dimmed his light under a ten-gallon Texas sombrero, but the sombrero itself has been known to official Washington since 1902 so Jack Garner couldn't retire to the abyssal obscurity which traditionally befits a vice president.

Today they're booming this 70-year-old southwest plainsman for President. It's a boom which light thinkers call a slap at Rooseveltian spending, but to congress it means much more. Any member of the Capitol Hill Garner club will explain it this way:

Congress Feels Its Oats.

Since 1933—indeed, for a half century—congress has slowly surrendered its power to the executive branch of government. Today's trend demands a restoration of that power and Jack Garner is the logical veteran to lead the battle. That's about all there's to it, except that the boom has reached alarming proportions in the four months since congress convened.

Down Texas way, where they've had a native son boom of their own for many years, no less than Son Elliott Roosevelt recently told his Texas State Radio network listeners: "John Garner is in the driver's seat right now, well in the lead as a likely Democratic candidate for the presidency in the 1940 election."

The American Institute of Public Opinion shows Garner stock rising from 20 per cent (of all Democrats) last December to 42 per cent in early April. And Emil Hurja, Jim Farley's political statistician, believes that early leaders in popular polls invariably stay in the lead.

How Texas Judges a Man.

What kind of a President would Jack Garner make? Folks down Uvalde way test a man's mettle by the way he behaves on a camping trip, his poker playing and his ability to judge whisky. They give the beetle-browed president of the senate 100 per cent on all three points, and it therefore stands to reason he must have a lot of horse sense.

Economy, for instance. Like most westerners who go to Washington, he's a lawyer and a banker. Jack

CAN HE BE STOPPED?—Nation-wide Democratic polls show Vice-President John Nance Garner holds 42 per cent of the party strength. Political Analyst Emil Hurja believes early leaders invariably hold their lead.

Garner is so successful that he owns a ranch and holds a basketful of mortgages on Uvalde. He drives a Chevrolet of 1930 vintage—his only car—and lives in a plain yellow brick house. When he goes camping with Ross Brumfield, Ben Franklin and Mon Fenley (two garagemen

G. O. P. Favors Dewey

While John N. Garner gains support for the 1940 Democratic presidential nomination, two polls favor New York District Attorney Thomas E. Dewey for the G. O. P. nomination:

Newsweek magazine, polling 50 political correspondents: Dewey, 23; Ohio's Sen. Robert Taft, 21; Ohio's Gov. John W. Bricker, 3; Michigan's Sen. Arthur H. Vandenberg, 2; no choice, 1.

Gallup poll of Republican voters in late March: Dewey, 50 per cent; Vandenberg, 15 per cent; Taft, 13 per cent; Herbert Hoover, 5 per cent.

and a well driller) he does the cooking and pays the expenses—but there's no money wasted.

It's the same way with his recent experiment in housing, much publicized as surpassing the Federal Housing administration in economy. Actually there's no comparison because the two FHA demonstration homes in Uvalde have 50 per cent more floor space and are pretty elegant homes compared with the Garner cottages. The vice president sank an average of $1,500 in each of his houses, gave them from two to four rooms, hot and cold water, bath and natural gas heat. They have no basements, no felt under the flooring, and less paint on the weatherboards and roof.

It Fits the Character.

In other words, there are fewer doodads and flingmabobs, which is a good indication of the Garner philosophy. He's old-fashioned enough to question some of the more unusual features of the New Deal. And he's the classic type politician who holds party solidarity above immediate expediency, which explains why he doubts that the Democratic party will hold together unless it regains the confidence of business.

Garner independence didn't assert itself until the winter of 1937 when the vice president demanded action to curb sit-down strikes. It gained strength the following spring when he refused to participate in the Supreme court enlargement fight.

If John Garner is elected President, December 17, 1938, will go down in history as the day his boom started. It was then he returned to Washington and found conservative Democrats trying to decipher handwriting on the wall. Did the November election defeats mean a national trend to Republicanism? President Roosevelt thought not, maintaining local issues alone were involved. Jim Farley thought otherwise and it was time for all good Democrats to come to the aid of their party.

Mr. Garner Talks Harmony.

What happened during Jack Garner's two-hour conference with Mr. Farley may never be known. Neither will the 3½-hour discussion with President Roosevelt be divulged, but when Cactus Jack emerged it was quite obvious the nation's No. 1 and No. 2 citizens had been talking party harmony.

Subsequently the Garner club grew. Paths were beaten to its door by Secretary of Agriculture Wallace, Secretary of Commerce Hopkins, Treasury Undersecretary Hanes and many a big and little congressman. Sometimes they came singly, at other times in groups, but always they came. It could mean only one thing: Cactus Jack had been chosen leader of the conservative Democrats.

This leadership is a peculiar thing, almost a negative quantity because Mr. Garner doesn't make speeches against his boss, indeed has never committed himself in public. Some arch-New Dealers think he's plotting craftily to overthrow Mr. Roosevelt, but the men who know him understand better. It's the magnetic charm of a man who's been mellowed and wizened by 37 years in congress, and who today is more than just a vice president but a patron saint as well.

His hobby is helping congressional youngsters get a start in the world. If you've any doubts about this, count noses among Texas' numerically insignificant representation and you'll find a powerhouse. In the house, Marvin Jones heads the agriculture committee, Milton West the elections committee, Hatton Sumners the judiciary committee, Fritz Lanham public buildings and grounds, Joseph Mansfield rivers and harbors and Martin Dies, un-American activities. Sam Rayburn is majority floor leader.

In the senate Morris Sheppard heads both military affairs and campaign expenditures committees while Tom Connally heads public buildings and grounds. Both make their voices heard often in other committees.

The 1940 campaign is still far from cut and dried, but there is no better watchword than ex-President Hoover's admonition in 1929 to a fledgling Washington reporter: "There's one man on Capitol Hill you will always want to watch. He is that red-faced bushy-browed man from Texas, John N. Garner—one of the shrewdest and ablest men in American political life."

The Questions

1. What is meant by the Roaring 40's?
2. Who had the "face that launched a thousand ships"?
3. How fast could Walter Johnson throw a ball?
4. Is there such a thing as a double-jointed person?
5. Has anyone ever seen the other side of the moon?
6. What is the difference between a thief and a robber?

The Answers

1. The streets of New York between Fortieth and Fiftyeth, especially the Times Square district.
2. Helen of Troy had the "face that launched a thousand ships."
3. A test made at the Remington Arms Co., showed that Walter Johnson threw a ball at the rate of 122 feet per second.
4. No. Loose or stretched ligaments give the appearance.
5. Inhabitants of the earth cannot see the other side of the moon, because the moon rotates on its axis at the same rate that it revolves around the earth. Therefore, it always keeps the same face towards the earth.
6. A thief is one who deprived another of property secretly or without open force, as opposed to a robber who uses open force or violence.

How Women in Their 40's Can Attract Men

Here's good advice for a woman during her change (usually from 38 to 52), who fears she'll lose her appeal to men, who worries about hot flashes, loss of pep, dizzy spells, upset nerves and moody spells. Get more fresh air, 8 hrs. sleep and if you need a good general system tonic take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, made especially for women. It helps Nature build up physical resistance, thus helps give more vivacity to enjoy life and assist calming jittery nerves and disturbing symptoms that often accompany change of life. WELL WORTH TRYING!

College 'Hides' Chestnut Trees From North Carolina Plague

RALEIGH, N. C.—Like modern Noahs fleeing before the deluge of a deadly blight, botanists at North Carolina State college are rearing young chestnut trees here, tremulously hopeful that the Asiatic blight will not find them out this far from the chestnut's natural habitat. When the scourge has killed the last tree in the highlands and has no further victims to feed upon, the young trees thriving on the campus here will be available for the eons-long task of replenishing the earth.

They will not have long to wait. Two decades ago the chestnut was one of North Carolina's most lordly trees. Highly prized as lumber, it also was valuable for chemical extracts, and for pulp. But chiefly it was beloved because of its fruit—the succulent chestnut. Twenty-five years ago, mountain wagons, drawn by oxen, brought full loads of the chestnuts down into the foothill towns, making trips which lasted a week or two.

Once Furnished Bread.

Large, easily cracked (and, alas, oftentimes wormy), the chestnut was almost the official nut of North Carolina. To the Cherokees of the Smokies, the chestnut was a traditional food, and the meat of the nut was dried, ground into a meal and made into bread. Destruction of the chestnut was a calamitous event to the Indians.

About 1904 an Oriental fungus known as Endothia Parasitica appeared on the trees, and with appalling speed swept through New England and entered the South. It attacked the bark of the American chestnut, girdled the trunk, and killed the tree with amazing dispatch. The fungus was very prolific and its seed so light that every breeze wafted it on its lethal journey.

Now in 1939, great splotches of gray trunks in the live forests of the Blue Ridge mountains bear witness to the arboreal tragedy. More than 95 per cent of North Carolina's chestnut trees are dead or dying. A few survive, but rather by chance than resistance; and they, too, are doomed.

Every effort to halt the scourge failing, forestry men at the state college several years ago transplanted healthy trees here, 200 miles from the chestnut belt. After four years, the young trees are healthy and thriving, and their guardians speculate that when the blight has run its course, their thin little line of sprouts will be the progenitors of another mighty chestnut forest in North Carolina.

Navy Represents Second Largest U. S. Expenditure

WASHINGTON.—With the exception of emergency relief agencies, the navy is Uncle Sam's greatest expense, representing an investment of approximately $4,000,000,000 by the end of the next fiscal year on June 30, 1940.

This is the estimate included in the navy's annual expense account, a model summation of income and outgo whose 86 pages itemize every piece of equipment from live stock valued at $33 to the aircraft carrier Lexington, listed as an item of $44,202,620. Other listings include expenditures for agricultural implements, cigarettes, pills, hay for live stock and airplanes.

A summation of annual naval appropriations since the nation was founded shows a marked increase from the $768,888 spent in 1794. During the entire period since then the navy has cost American taxpayers $16,634,002,603, of which $13,032,828,842 has been spent since 1917 and $3,000,000,000 under the present administration.

HOG RAISERS:

YOU CAN produce PORK for $3.85 a hundred if you feed a properly balanced ration! Vitality 40% Hog Balancer, plus your own grains, will produce pork cheaper than any other way.

If you use corn or grain alone it costs from $4.50 to $6.50 to produce 100 pounds of pork.

We hope you will give us a chance to save you money on feeding your hogs.
